Responsibilities of a PSO

The PSO is the home of Continuous Process Improvement Programs with respect to project management processes and practices. In a Level 5 organization, that responsibility extends to all business processes, and the PSO takes on an enterprise- wide role. The BA/PM professional is the key staff resource in driving those improvement programs.

Assuming that the PSO is part of the project review process, a BA/PM professional is in an excellent position to identify process and practice problem areas and opportunities for improvement initiatives. I have participated with my clients in these project reviews and found a number of opportunities for improvement initiatives. Poor, inadequate, or inconvenient scheduling of training has been a common problem. Difficulty understanding process documentation or incomplete documentation has been another frequently occurring problem area.

Overview

Warriors Security is totally customer driven, we tailor make our services to the client's exact specifications, providing highly trained officers that are accredited with PSARA. We strive to ensure that expectations are not only met but also exceeded. Our course is to provide you with a total solution and a peace of mind.

Management and Supervision

We understand the importance of excellent supervision and have identified it as a vital part of our success. We believe in two types of supervision namely:

Operational Management

Daily and spontaneous visits are made by our area managers who are accountable for maintaining set standards that the guards sign upon employment which keeps up the good standards of service delivery.

Divisional Management

Regular visits for the purpose of assessing standards are being met and to liaise with the clients as part of Warriors Securities operations by the Area manager of Warriors Security.

No matter how varied your business or personal requirements are, Warriors Security thrives to accommodate all your security equipment needs. Offering facilitation, consultation, equipment assistance, training and technical support are some of the ways in which we provide a warm relationship with our customers. For any query on our technologies please E-mail warriors.securors@gmail.com and we'll respond to you in no time.
